SETTLEMENT

<http://books.google.com/googlebooks/agreement/>

What this means to you:

If you are a reader, you will soon have the ability to purchase in & out-of-print books through Google Books. If you are the author of an out-of-print book, visit the Google Book Settlement page at: <http://books.google.com/booksrightsholders/> to formally register a claim. If you are a publisher, visit the Google Books Partner Program page at: <https://books.google.com/partner/> to direct traffic and sales towards your website.

From Google:

In-Copyright and In-Print Books

In-print books are books that publishers are still actively selling, the ones you see at most bookstores. This agreement expands the online marketplace for in-print books by letting authors and publishers turn on the "preview" and "purchase" models that make their titles more easily available through Book Search.

In-Copyright but Out-of-Print Books

Out-of-print books aren't actively being published or sold, so the only way to procure one is to track it down in a library or used bookstore. When this agreement is approved, every out-of-print book that Google Books digitizes will become available online for preview and purchase, unless its author or publisher chooses to "turn off" that title.

Out-of-Copyright Books

This agreement doesn't affect how Google Books display out-of-copyright books; they will continue to allow Book Search users to read, download and print these titles.

SEARCHING

http://books.google.com/advanced\_book\_search

The screenshot shows the Google Books Advanced Book Search interface. It is divided into three main sections:

- Keyword Searching Options (Light Blue): Located at the top, it includes a search bar, a dropdown menu for the number of results (set to 10), and a "Google Search" button. Below the search bar are four radio button options: "with all of the words", "with the exact phrase", "with at least one of the words", and "without the words".
- Restricting Search Options (Green): Located in the middle, it includes radio button options for "Search:" (All books, Limited preview and full view, Full view only, Public domain only), "Content:" (All content, Books, Magazines), and a "Language" dropdown menu set to "any language".
- General Search Options (Red): Located at the bottom, it includes input fields for "Title", "Author", "Publisher", "Subject", "Publication Date", "ISBN", and "ISSN". Each field has a label and a description of what it searches for. The "Publication Date" field has radio button options for "Return content published anytime" and "Return content published between".

Annotations with arrows point to the "KEYWORD SEARCHING OPTIONS" label, the "RESTRICTING SEARCH OPTIONS" label, and the "GENERAL SEARCH OPTIONS" label.

Search Google Books at any time through the Google Books page (books.google.com) but be aware that the search will bring up fairly broad results. To narrow your search, use the Advanced Book Search instead (it's the link to the right of the "Search Books" button).

The top part of the advanced search page (in light blue) offers more keyword search options. These will not restrict the search overly much, but it does give the option to display up to 100 results per page.

The middle part offers limiting features. You can't search on any of these options by themselves, but you can narrow down your search by checking any of these fields (Type, Content and Language).

The bottom part shows more conventional search options, such as Title, Author, Publisher, Subject, Date and ISBN/ISSN. This is the most useful section when you're first getting started.

Note: Unlike most library catalogs (including ours), you do not need to enter the author's last name first (i.e. Sleator, William vs. William Sleator). Both searches will work in Google Books.

VIEWS

<http://books.google.com/googlebooks/screenshots.html>

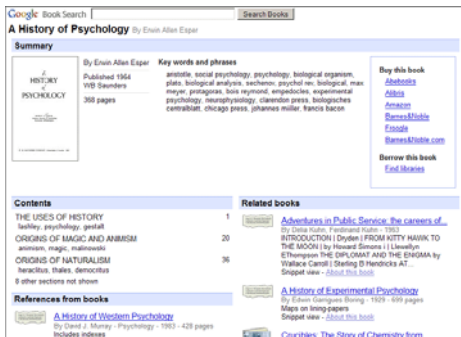

After you perform a search (and if you haven't restricted the search in Advanced Search), you may notice any or all of the types of results below:

From Google:

No Preview Available

Like a card catalog, you're able to see basic information about the book.

Snippet View

The Snippet View, like a card catalog, shows information about the book plus a few snippets – a few sentences to display your search term in context.

Limited Preview

If the publisher or author has given Google Books permission, you can see a limited number of pages from the book as a preview.

Full View

You can see books in Full View if the book is out of copyright, or if the publisher or author has asked to make the book fully viewable. The Full View allows you to view any page from the book, and if the book is in the public domain, you can download, save and print a PDF version to read at your own pace.

GOOGLE BOOKS FULL VIEW MODE

The most useful (and interesting) feature of Google Books is the full-view option for books and periodicals. For the sake of demonstration, we'll look at the full-view results for The Up-to-Date Waitress by Janet McKenzie Hill, published in 1906 (public domain).

The Overview page at <http://books.google.com/books?id=Si9IAAAIAAJ> offers information about the download options (PDF or EPUB). PDFs can be read on any computer with Adobe Acrobat (free software) installed. EPUB books can be read on the Sony Reader, Apple iPhone and Touch, and a variety of other devices (but not, as of this time, on the Amazon Kindle). Not all public domain books have this option, but if you want to keep (and read) a copy locally instead of off of Google Books, download the PDF (or EPUB) copy to your computer.

If you scroll to the bottom of the page, you can see the library that owned the book (University of California) and the date it was scanned (December 1, 2007).

To read the book, either click the blue "Read this Book" button at the top of the page or click on "Read" on the left-hand side. This will take you into the images of the book.

If you have a slow connection to the Internet or do not wish to view the images, you may have the option to convert the entire book to Plain Text (this will download very fast, but might have typos). Google Books uses OCR - optical character recognition - to identify the text. Basically this will take the picture of a letter (say 'a') and try to match it up to the text version of a letter (a).

GOOGLE BOOKS TOOLBAR TRANSLATION

It makes sense to familiarize yourself with the full-text toolbar, especially if you're considering reading this book on your computer screen.

The first two buttons on the left (the magnifying glass with a minus or plus sign) will decrease or increase the text on the page.

The next three buttons (a single page, double page and a box with four pages) give you a choice of how the pages are displayed.

- The single page is the default view and will only show one page at a time on the screen. To view additional pages, you can use the far-right scroll bar or the slightly darkened area at the bottom of the page.
- The double page will show two pages on the screen, much like if you were reading a physical book. This is my favorite display mode for scanning through the book. When you have two pages up, you can only 'flip' the page by clicking the left/right arrow buttons in the middle of the toolbar.
- The box with four pages will show thumbnails of all of the pages of the book. This view is great for finding pictures and chapters, but it is almost impossible to read any of the thumbnail pages.

The next button (a box with arrows pushing out at the corners) will maximize the book to the entire window (removing all the ads and information off to the left). The toolbar will remain at the top of the page. This button is the most useful for reading the book. Click the button a second time to bring you back to the general browse.

The "Contents" text link will bring up a fast way to jump to different chapters (depending on what's been indexed at the front of the book). To the right of the Contents link, you can also type in a particular page number and hit <ENTER> to jump to that page. The dark blue arrows to the right of the text box will take you backwards or forwards in the book.

Plain text converts the entire document to text (instead of images). Clip lets you cut and paste paragraphs or chapters into a new document.

Link will give you a way to find the book again fast if you cut and paste it into a document or e-mail. Feedback will let you report to Google if the page is scanned incorrectly (you will need to be logged into your Google account to do this).

Download may or may not be available - this is another way to download the book to your computer.

If you have a Google Account (or Gmail address), you can create a list of books that you own (or would like to browse). These don't have to be full-view books -they can be any book found in Google Books.

You may wish to keep track of the books in your private library for online ordering or filling in gaps in your collection.

To access My Library, go to Google Books (books.google.com) and click on "My Library" at the top right of the screen.

You can add books quickly to your library by clicking "Import Books" and entering the ISBN number of the books (if you have a barcode scanner, this will go even faster. I used this method for my private collection). If you have older books, you can always find the book in Google Books and click "Add to My Library" at the left-hand side of the screen.

My Library has an export option (XML format only, which only makes it useful for other web-based programs) and an RSS (real simple syndication) feed. It's still in preliminary stages right now, so keep checking back for new features.
